THE MANAGEMENT STYLE OF THE SUPREME BEINGS

WHY SUPREME BEINGS MAKE BAD MANAGERS

When the Supreme Being and his son decide that being supreme isn’t just a job for one person, they create a management position. Unfortunately, the said position quickly becomes the mostoted job in the universe. The new manager must deal with the previous manager’s management style.

In the first few years of the new manager’s tenure, things go smoothly. The organization is well-organized, and the management style remains consistent with the previous manager’s. However, as time passes, the new manager begins to struggle with the unique challenges of managing the universe.

Despite their best efforts, the new manager’s management style is often at odds with the needs of the organization. The Supreme Being and his son, who are used to the previous manager’s management style, struggle to adapt to the new manager’s approaches. This causes tension and confusion within the organization.

The new manager’s management style is often characterized by a lack of direction and a tendency to micromanage. They struggle to motivate their team and to establish clear goals and expectations. The Supreme Being and his son are frustrated with the new manager’s approach and begin to question their decision to hire a new manager.

In the end, the new manager’s management style is unable to overcome the challenges of managing the universe. The Supreme Being and his son decide to return to the previous management style, and the new manager is forced to resign.

The lesson to be learned from this story is that managing the universe is not a job for one person. The Supreme Being and his son should have hired a team of managers, each with their own unique strengths and skills.
